OBITUARY Speedway promoter

Alf Shields, a promoter of the Rowley Park Speedway during the burgeoning days of the sport in the 1950s, died at the weekend, aged 86.

Mr Shields took over promotion of the track in 1951, operating it successfully until 1954, when its promotion was taken on by Kym Bonython, who combined racing and promotion.

The Torrens Rd speedway opened in 1949 and during its early years ran at the same time as the rival track at Kilburn.

Mr Shields ran the speedway as a family business, with his wife and children involved.

He is survived by his widow and three of his four daughters.
